A new exhibit coming to the Manitoba Museum aims to unravel some of the mysteries of Ancient Egypt and will bring a real mummy to Winnipeg for the first time in nearly five decades.

Wrapped: The Mummy of Pesed arrives at the museum later this month, and on Tuesday a 13-foot sarcophagus created by two local artists was unveiled to watch over the museum's courtyard during the exhibit's six-month-long stop in Winnipeg.

"It's a once-in-a-life-time opportunity to see materials from Akhmim, Egypt," said Manitoba Museum exhibits manager Hanna Peters. "These are real artifacts and materials that would have been used for mummification.

"There's mysteries in ancient beliefs so it's really going to be a cool exhibit to see."

The exhibit centres around the mummy of Lady Pesed, a woman who lived in Akhmim some 2,300 years ago, and includes more than 60 artifacts uncovered from that area of Egypt.

"The whole exhibit talks about the process of mummification and forensic archeology," explained Peters, who said analysis has revealed Pesed had at least one child during her lifetime, and likely lived to be 60 or 70 years old.

The mummy and her coffin are on loan from Westminster College in New Wilmington, Pa.

Winnipeg will mark the third stop for the travelling exhibit, which also tells the story of Western fascination with mummies over the last 400 years.

Wrapped: The Mummy of Pesed runs Oct. 25 to April 6 next year.

Payday loan companies ordered to pay up

A payday lender has been ordered to refund more than 60 people after they were found to have been charging fees above the $17 per $100 limit.

Manitoba's Consumer Protection Office has ordered Cash Store Financial Services Inc., which runs The Cash Store Inc. and Instaloans Inc. to refund 61 customers after they were charged additional money for cash cards.

People who received a payday loan from those two stores between Oct. 18, 2010 and Oct. 17, 2012 and were charged extra for an electronic funds transfer or cash card might be eligible for a refund. People can email the Consumer Protection Office at consumers@gov.mb.ca, or call them at 204-945-3800. METRO

Hughes calls new Elmwood park her 'seventh medal'

'Nobody is moving us now.' Park built on site of former Kelvin Community Centre

BERNICE PONTANILLA
bernice.pontanilla@metronews.ca

One of Winnipeg's greatest Olympians said a new park in Elmwood that bears her name is her seventh medal and "caps off" everything she ever did in sports.

Clara Hughes, the only Olympic athlete to have won multiple medals in both winter and summer games, said last year when construction began on the $758,500 redevelopment of the park, she brought her six medals with her.

"I didn't bring them here today because quite honestly this is the seventh and most beautiful, most brightly shining medal of all, and it is the resurrection of this space and this place for kids to come and have an outlet to play, to express themselves," said Hughes, who won medals in both cycling and speedskating in a career that spanned five Olympics.

The Clara Hughes Park is located on a piece of land at 281 Henderson Hwy. that used to house Kelvin Community Centre, which is where Hughes veered away from "trouble" and got her start in sports.

In 2008, to the dismay of local residents, Kelvin was demolished. It was during those "dark days" that local resident John King heard rumours the site could become a pawnshop.

He and other members of the community rallied for their club, and were able to garner Hughes' public support.

"(I'm) ecstatic, we've been wanting this."

Quake rescue in Philippines made difficult

Death toll rises.
Damage to roads and bridges in the quake zone is hindering rescue efforts

The death toll from a 7.2-magnitude earthquake that struck the central Philippine island of Bohol on Tuesday rose to 93, as rescuers struggled to reach patients in a collapsed hospital. Centuries-old stone churches crumbled and wide areas were without power.

The quake struck at 8:12 a.m. and was centred about 33 km below Carmen city, where many small buildings collapsed.

Many roads and bridges were reported damaged, making rescue operations difficult. Historic churches dating from the Spanish colonial period were badly damaged. Among them the 16th-century Basilica of the Holy Child in Cebu, which lost its bell tower. The highest number of dead — 18 — was in Loon, west of Carmen where patients were trapped in a hospital.

Offices and schools were closed for a national holiday — the Muslim festival of Eid al-Adha — which may have saved lives.

Aledel Cuizon said the quake that caught her in her bedroom sounded like "a huge truck that was approaching and the rumbling sound grew louder as it got closer."

She and her neighbours ran outside, where she saw concrete electric poles "swaying like coconut trees."

Ethnic Russian tensions

276 protesters detained in Moscow

Moscow police on Tuesday detained 276 people who were protesting the stabbing death of an ethnic Russian man. Authorities said a suspect had been arrested.

The killing has raised tensions between ethnic Russians and natives of the predominantly Muslim Caucasus, many of whom have migrated to big cities.

The suspect is from the Caucuses nation of Azerbaijan.

Russia's Investigative Committee said in a statement Tuesday that the suspect, 30-year-old Orkhan Zeynalov, was detained in a town outside Moscow.

Police did not say what evidence pointed to his involvement. Tensions have long simmered between ethnic Russians and natives of the Caucasus.

Tanks stood at intersections and roadblocks cut main thoroughfares in Egypt on Tuesday, as authorities tightened security during the annual Muslim Eid al-Adha holiday amid continued deadlock between supporters of the ousted Islamist president and the military-backed interim government.

Troops sealed off Cairo's central Tahrir Square with rows of armoured vehicles and barbed wire, hoping to thwart any new attempt by supporters of Mohammed Morsi to enter. In recent weeks, they have tried to storm the plaza, the birthplace of the 2011 uprising that forced Hosni Mubarak out. Authorities have warned pro-Morsi protesters against entering Tahrir. Playing a game of thrones

In a speech from the throne Wednesday, the Tories will be driving ahead with their jobs and tough-on-crime agendas while steering slightly to the left to pick up passengers on the social and consumer-issues track. Several consumer-friendly measures are aimed at turning the attention of voters away from the Senate spending controversy.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Relief ahead for cable, satellite TV subscribers?

The sales pitch will include measures directed at alleviating consumer irritants, such as a plan to force cable and satellite TV providers to adopt a pick-and-pay price model, in conjunction with the bundled channel payment plans.

LUKE WISLEY (FLICKR: LUKE WISLEY)

The friendly skies could get even friendlier

The Tories also hope voters will appreciate moves to create an airline passenger bill of rights, designed to compensate people who are inconvenienced when air carriers overbook flights.

Reining in those roaming fees

There will also likely be references to increasing competition in the wireless sector and to capping roaming fees.

"We think roaming fees have been a long standing concern for not only consumers but for competition within the telecom sector," Industry Minister James Moore said.

Will #thronespeech be a trending topic?

The Conservatives already have a website and Twitter hashtag set up to bring Canadians highlights from the throne speech under the banner "Seizing Canada's Moment — Security and Prosperity in an Uncertain World."

Trudeau: You can't trust the Tories

The opposition is sure to take advantage of the optics. The Tories, says Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau, cannot be trusted to do any of the things they'll promise in the speech.

"You asked for open and honest government," Trudeau says in a video message posted on the party's website. "Instead, you're getting secrecy, distrust and scandal."

Federal government failing missing women: UN official

Disappearances of aboriginal women.
Feds have so far refused to entertain the idea of an inquiry

The federal government should set up a national inquiry into the "disturbing phenomenon" of missing and murdered aboriginal women, a senior UN rights official said Tuesday.

James Anaya, the UN special rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, has spent the last nine days touring the country, talking to aboriginals and both federal and provincial government officials.

And while governments across Canada have pledged a number of steps to deal with the problem of missing aboriginal women, it's not enough, Anaya said in Ottawa as he wrapped up his visit.

There has been strong pressure from aboriginal groups and some provinces for an inquiry into the disappearances. The Native Women's Association of Canada estimates there have been more than 600 such cases in the last 20 years.

Dustin Paxton. Convicted torturer shows a pattern of violence, Crown says

The Crown at a dangerous offender hearing for convicted torturer Dustin Paxton argued Tuesday that he is a high risk to reoffend and difficult to treat.

In her final sentencing arguments, Julie Morgan told a Calgary courtroom that Paxton has shown a pattern of violence that stretches back years and is always the same.

"He is unable to control his anger," she said. "He gets angry and frustrated over minor disagreements. The victims are known to him. He uses threats and physicality … he manipulates, belittles and controls his victims."

Paxton, 33, was found guilty in 2012 of aggravated and sexual assault against his former business partner after a man was found dumped at a Regina hospital in 2010 near death.

The Crown wants Paxton to be kept in prison for an indeterminate period of time as a dangerous offender, but if the judge wanted to fix a set sentence, it should be in the 15- to 18-year range, Morgan said.

Paxton's lawyer, Jim Lutz, argued that his client shouldn't be found to be a dangerous offender. He recommended an eight-year sentence — minus six years of credit Paxton would receive for time already served.

Ontario-born Eleanor Catton wins Booker Prize for fiction

Eleanor Catton holds her prize and her book in London, England, Tuesday after being announced the winner of the Man Booker Prize for Fiction. Catton won the 50,000-pound ($83,000) prize for her book The Luminaries.

The Luminaries. Catton becomes the youngest writer to win the award, for her ambitious, epic 19th-century gold-rush murder mystery

Youth and heft triumphed at the Booker Prize on Tuesday, as 28-year-old Ontario-born, New Zealand-based author Eleanor Catton won the fiction award for The Luminaries, an ambitious 832-page murder mystery set during the 19th-century.

The choice should give heart to young authors of oversized tales. Catton is the youngest writer to win the prestigious award — and her novel is easily the longest Booker champion.

In her acceptance speech, she thanked her editors, her agent and her publishers for not putting pressure on her while writing her novel.

"I was free, throughout, to concern myself with questions not of value but of worth. This is all the more incredible to me, because The Luminaries is and was … a publisher's nightmare," she said.

"The shape and form of the book made certain kinds of editorial suggestions not only mathematically impossible but even more egregious, astrologically impossible."

Catton had been bookmakers' joint favourite among the six prize finalists, alongside British novellist Jim Crace, for his rural parable The Harvest.

She also beat Ireland's Colm Toibin, Indian-American writer Jhumpa Lahiri, Zimbabwe's NoViolet Bulawayo and B.C.-based author Ruth Ozeki.

Catton received her trophy, which comes with a 50,000-pound ($83,000) cheque, from Camilla, the Duchess of Cornwall, during a dinner ceremony at London's medieval Guildhall.

Still No. 2. Diet Coke sales fizzle as concerns over artificial sweetener pop up

Diet Coke, the U.S.'s No. 2 soda, may be losing some of its pop.

During a conference call with analysts Tuesday, a Coca-Cola executive noted that Diet Coke was "under a bit of pressure" because of people's concerns over its ingredients, alluding to the growing wariness of artificial sweeteners in recent years.

Steve Cahillane, who heads Coca-Cola's North American and Latin American business, noted that the issue wasn't specific to Diet Coke, but that many diet foods and drinks in the U.S. are facing the same concerns.

Too much risk. U.K. bank set to cut ties with Somali money-transfer company

A British bank could soon be cutting a financial lifeline for millions of Somalis.

Barclays is poised to sever its ties to Dahabshiil, one of the Somali expatriate community's biggest money transfer services, as part of a larger reorganization of its business. Barring a successful last-minute court challenge, experts say the move will jeopardize 100 million pounds ($160 million US) worth of payments made from the U.K. each year.

Barclays' move, part of an industry-wide effort to insulate banks from the risks associated with money-laundering and corruption, could force Dahabshiil to stop executing transfers between individuals within days. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

'Oral interference,' from chomping to chatting, blunts the power of promos, a new study finds

KIERON MONKS
Metro World News in London

Eating popcorn makes you insensitive to advertising in cinemas, as "oral interference" disrupts our ability to learn brand names, claim researchers at the University of Cologne. Test groups who had been eating remembered nothing compared to a group who had not, said study author Dr. Sascha Topolinski, who enlightened us further.

Please explain this mysterious process.

The mouth automatically generates sub-vocal speech when we encounter novel names, which is how a brand embeds itself. But if you are eating something, your mouth cannot train with the word. In our case it was popcorn.

So if my mouth does the remembering, why am I so bad with names?

My last name is difficult so I understand, but people who are bad with names often are suffering interference. Try to keep your mouth free in future.

Can I ignore advertising everywhere by chewing at the right times?

It could work — say by chewing gum to avoid TV commercials and Internet banners. Our subjects quite enjoyed the cinema adverts without being able to remember anything about them.

IMAGE: METRO WORLD NEWS

So it works with all foods?

Yes, and by vocal interaction like chatting; even smoking a cigarette would have that effect.

Are you worried that advertisers might kill you?

Well, our research is only about new brands so Apple and Burger King are already in your brain. One solution could be that cinemas only sell snacks after the adverts. That would please everyone.

Pipelines safer than rail or truck for workers: Report

A report by the Fraser Institute says pipeline is by far the safest way to transport oil when worker injury rates are compared.

Using data from the U.S. Department of Transportation between 2005 and 2009, the study found the rates of injury requiring hospitalization in the U.S. were 30 times lower among pipeline workers than rail workers involved in shipping oil.

For truck transport, the difference is even more stark, with an injury rate 37 times higher than oil transport by pipeline. THE CANADIAN PRESS

First class wins again

Coach passengers feel the squeeze

It's not your imagination. There really is tighter quarters on many planes these days.

U.S. airlines are taking out old, bulky seats in favour of so-called slimline models that take up less space from front to back, allowing for five or six more seats on each plane.

The new seats generally have thinner padding. And new layouts on some planes have made the aisles slightly narrower, meaning the dreaded beverage cart bump to the shoulder happens more often. This is going on in coach while airlines are spending heavily to add better premium seats in the front of the plane.

FLYING SOMEWHERE? TAKE A SEAT

JUST SAYIN'

Mike Benhaim
metronews.ca

I am told there was a time when "flying the friendly skies" was a luxurious experience. That, of course, was before the skies became just a little less neighbourly.

Now, every time I travel, I have to head to the airport three hours early so that I have time to check my luggage, completely disrobe for security, have them confiscate half of my toiletries, then be told that my carry-on can't be carried on because I recklessly included a pair of tweezers, which nowadays, is tantamount to a weapon of mass destruction.

I then have to gather all of my personal belongings, get dressed all over again, wait in line to buy a$12 bottle of water, because apparently it's OK to have one, just not to carry your reasonably-priced one past the checkpoint. Then I head to the gate for boarding. Theoretically, it would be here that I could finally relax and enjoy the journey, only now I am starving and that bottle of water has made me require use of the facilities. Unfortunately, we are now under the strict regime of air transit regulations, meaning that first I have to undergo a training seminar on seat-belt fastening and proper employment of oxygen masks that we faithfully assume will reveal themselves in the event of a shift in cabin pressure. Then, once finally liberated from our shackles by a light and faint Pavlovian bell, I find myself behind every weak-bladdered and nervous-stomached traveller for a chance to approach the majestic lavatory. When I finally emerge, the refreshment cart has passed me by, which is just as well because, while they do sell food you don't want at prices it isn't worth, they no longer accept cash anyway. Only Visa and perhaps Amex, but as luck would have it, I only brought my MasterCard.

Now, I may be frustrated, hungry, and cranky, but I would never think to take it out on any of the flight crew. After all, they're just doing their job, and even if they weren't, any loss of composure could get me Tasered by an air marshal and/or put on the no-fly list, which in addition to complicating future travel, would really make it hard to get back home.

That said, I take comfort in the fact that the Security Authority's ever-growing roster of ordinances, while occasionally misguided, are intended toward the honourable purpose of keeping us all safe and sound. Then, just over a week ago, a nine-year-old kid with no ticket, no money, and no adult supervision manages to hop on a flight to Vegas.

Now, I find myself compelled to rethink.

Just sayin'.

Mike Benhaim is filling in for Paul Sullivan, who will return next week.

RE: Unpaid Interns: Toronto Students Scrub Hotel Toilets For Nothing, published Oct. 15

A Vancouver luxury hotel placed an ad seeking unpaid interns to bus tables last month, igniting public outcry. Now, several interns have complained they aren't gaining necessary experience performing menial jobs.

Her internship had nothing to do with her hopes and dreams to work in the hotel and hospitality industry.

When she one day applies for a career job, and puts down her experience as "I am great at changing sheets, cleaning toilets and disposing of used condoms," will that help?

What happened to her and many other interns is not right and it is not fair. The only hope she and many have is to suck it up and hope to make some kind of contact that can help them in the future.

But with four interns per year (one every three months), over two year period (assumed length of the program she is studying) how many interns is she now competing with?

And all are relying on the same contact or several contacts at the same place.

Let's say she is going to medical school and wants to be a surgeon, her internship would be equivalent to sitting at a receptionist desk and doing patient data entry. Calling patients, following up on surgeries, booking appointments, etc. After four years, you may be the best data entry clerk, but you can definitely not perform a surgery. At least I wouldn't let you touch me.

No more teardrops on her guitar, this girl has made it

Taylor Swift. On the heels of a record-setting sixth songwriter-artist of the year award, star says her next album is taking a 'different turn'

Songwriting is the topic of the moment for Taylor Swift. The 23-year-old pop star was honoured for a record sixth time as songwriter-artist of the year by the Nashville Songwriters Association International, surpassing guys like Vince Gill and Alan Jackson. She earned the award with 14 hits in the top 30 over the last year, a tribute to the popularity of her fourth album, Red.

As Swift accepts the award, she's six months deep in the songwriting process for her next album. "I think the goal for the next album is to continue to change, and never change in the same way twice," the seven-time Grammy winner said.

"How do I write these figurative diary entries in ways that I've never written them before and to a sonic backdrop that I've never explored before? It's my fifth album, which is crazy to think about, but I think what I'm noticing about it so far is it's definitely taking a different turn than anything I've done before."

Swift sat down for an interview after the ribbon-cutting on the new $4-million US Taylor Swift Education Center at the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum in her adopted hometown of Nashville.

Next month you leave on a stadium tour of Australia, making you the first female solo performer to tour that country since Madonna 20 years ago. Madonna was the top pop star in the world at the time. Do you see yourself as that kind of pop star?

I would never see myself that way. I see myself as kind of this girl who writes songs in her bedroom. You can kind of dress it up all you want and you can put together an amazing theatrical production; you can become a better performer as time goes by, and you can try to excite people, but I'm always going to be a girl who writes songs in her bedroom in my own personal perception of myself.

You said recently you've been working on songs for the new album for about six months. What can you tell us about what you have planned?

It's too early to tell who are going to be my predominant collaborators, but I do know that my absolute dream collaborators were Shellback and Max Martin on the last project. I've never been so challenged as a songwriter. I've never learned so much. I've never just been so excited to show up to the studio every day, just because you never know what we're going to put together.

I'll bring in ideas and they'll take such a different turn than where I thought they were going to go, and that level of unexpected spontaneity is something that really thrills me in the process of making music. ... "What if we did this? What if we made it weirder? What if we took it darker?" I love people who have endless strange and exciting ideas about where music can go.

Taylor Swift appears at the premiere of Romeo and Juliet in Los Angeles on Sept. 24. Swift has just been named songwriter-artist of the year by the Nashville Songwriters Association International for a record-setting six times. She's also up for entertainer of the year at the CMAs on Nov. 6. If she wins, she'd be the first woman with three such titles. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

How far are you willing to push the boundaries of your sound?

I definitely think that with music my favourite thing about Nashville is that it's a music hub that accepts and allows all genres to be present, and I think there's been a kind of fusing of genres lately that for me makes me really happy and excited. I am blown away at getting six CMA nominations in a year that I pushed the boundaries of what a genre is more than ever before. I'm so happy that people understood what I was doing conceptually.

Getting those six CMA nominations to me signified that this community knew that I was not running from where I come from. I was exploring, and I think the more people who know what country music is, the more people will gravitate toward Nashville.

Golden Globes. Golden pair return to host again

Get used to seeing these faces at the Golden Globes for the next couple years. CONTRIBUTED

The duo of Tina Fey and Amy Poehler proved such a success at hosting the Golden Globes in January that they've been signed up for the same job for the next two years.

NBC, the Hollywood Foreign Press Association and producers of the Golden Globes announced the unusual two-year commitment on Tuesday. Next year's Golden Globes will be held in Beverly Hills, Calif., on Jan. 12.

Allen Shapiro, CEO of Dick Clark Productions, said the former Saturday Night Live chums have "a truly unique chemistry, making them one of the most talented and captivating pairings of all time."

They were bathed in critical love for their performance this year, with The Associated Press critic Frazier Moore calling them "the night's biggest winners."

They got laughs without being polarizing, as was the case with predecessor Ricky Gervais. Poehler even poked fun during the show at the Hollywood debate over whether Gervais was too hard-edged in mocking Hollywood stars.

"We want to assure you that we have no intention of being edgy or offensive tonight," said Poehler, star of the NBC sitcom Parks and Recreation. "Because, as Ricky learned the hard way, when you run afoul of the Hollywood Foreign Press, they make you host this show two more times!"

More important than critical support, Fey and Poehler were good for business. The Golden Globes had their best ratings in six years for the most recent presentation, and were up 17 per cent over the 2012 show.

Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned

Horror film. Soak in the wrath of the newest Carrie as the young woman lashes out at the society who tortured her

IN FOCUS

Pig's blood continues to have a dramatic impact on the Carrie movie experience. CONTRIBUTED

This weekend actress Chloë Grace Moretz will recreate one of the most famous sequences from 1970s cinema.

Years after the release of the 1976 Brian De Palma-directed Carrie, the movie's impact was summed up by Esquire, who wrote, "Like any top-tier, truly unforgettable scene in cinema (it's) so well-known that you don't even have to see it to know it."

The image of the teenaged Carrie (Sissy Spacek), the victim of a cruel practical joke, dressed in her best prom queen outfit, wide eyed as pig's blood covers her, dripping from the fake jewels on her tiara, has been referenced in everything from the sitcom Roseanne — daughter Darlene says the only way she would go to the prom is if she was the one sitting in the rafters with a bucket of pig's blood — to the X-Files, Mystery Science Theater 3000, Scream, Gilmore Girls and even Veronica Mars.

The gore soaked scene also provided the inspiration for a sequel called The Rage: Carrie 2. In this unintentionally funny B-movie Rachel (Emily Bergl) is another high-schooler with the ability to make objects fly and explode with her mind.

"Do not attempt to sit through this movie without a hefty supply of psycho-pharmaceutical drugs," warned one critic.

Marginally better was Carrie, a 2002 television film meant to serve as a pilot for a proposed series. But that involved making some sweeping changes to the plot, including having Carrie survive the high school carnage and final run-in with her unstable mother. Bad reviews and poor ratings doomed this to the DVD delete bins. From the screen to the stage, Carrie provided the source material for an ill-conceived 1988 Broadway musical and several spoofs, including Scarrie! The Musical and Carrie's Facts of Life, a mash-up of Stephen King's story and the sitcom The Facts of Life.

All singing, all dancing versions of Carrie's humiliation aside, the original film remains a horror touchstone, but don't expect the new remake to be a carbon copy.

"The script is totally different from the (original)," Moretz told ET Online. "It's more like the book. It's a more Black Swan version — it messes with your mind."

One thing is for sure. There will be blood — pig's blood.

Judy Greer, who plays Miss Desjardin in the new film, says the prom scene is "amazeballs," adding, "It's really totally jarring and creepy but also, in a strange way, gorgeous."

Charlie Hunnam

He's an actor, but don't tell Charlie Hunnam to be someone he's not

Charlie Hunnam may have cited his hectic TV schedule as the reason he dropped out of Fifty Shades of Grey, but sources tell E! News the spotlight had a lot more to do with it. "More than anything he hates attention, and being in Fifty Shades of Grey would force him to do lots of media," a source says. "Plus, he hates conforming and being told what to do. This role would force him to have to be something he is not." Now it turns out his former co-star, Dakota Johnson, may be having doubts about the high-profile film as well. "Dakota is having a very hard time dealing with all the press. When she first got the role, it was way too much for her," another source says. "It's been tough."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Gwyneth Paltrow. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Why Gwyneth should beware Vanity Fair

Gwyneth Paltrow should probably be bracing herself for a blockbuster take-down piece on her that Vanity Fair is planning to publish.

"We started a story on her. We have a very good writer and it'll run," the magazine's editor-in-chief, Graydon Carter, tells the Times of London. In fact, Paltrow apparently helped ensure the piece will go forward when she emailed friends and colleagues pleading with them to not cooperate with the article's author and never work with the magazine again. "She sort of forced my hand," Carter says.

Moving on

Seems Miley is sweet on the Rolling Stone heir

It looks like Miley Cyrus has gotten over her broken engagement to Liam Hemsworth pretty quickly, as the Wrecking Ball singer is reportedly smitten with Rolling Stone magazine heir Theo Wenner, according to Radar Online.

"She's definitely dating him," a source says. "Miley talks about how hot Theo is and how nice he's been to her. She's definitely completely in lust with him." Cyrus even reportedly made time for Wenner while launching her new album, Bangerz, in New York last week. "He didn't come to the release party, but she snuck out at one point and went and met him at the Plaza," the source says. "She said she's never met anyone as sweet as Theo."

Forget the tuna, get Kate some OJ

As pregnant Kate Winslet eases into her third trimester, she admits her cravings aren't living up to the stories she hears about other pregnancies.

"At the moment, I seem to be wanting orange juice a lot," she tells Us Weekly. "I don't know quite why that is, but it's not so weird. I wish I could tell you I had some weird craving. I wish I could be like that woman on the advert who loves tuna fish and banana, but I'm not like that at all."

Meanwhile, Winslet insists she's totally fine doing press for her next film, Labor Day, with her due date approaching. "Just don't let me sneeze," she warns, "because I might wet myself at the same time."

South Beach is filled with beautiful Art Deco architecture and is a great spot for people watching. JIM BYERS/METRO

Where the pretty people are

Miami. From South Beach to Art Deco walking tours, there's something for all

JIM BYERS
@jimbyerstravel
jimbyerstravel.com

Sleek, chic and sexy. This is a city that's got a lot on the go, and it's consistently one of the top draws for Canadians looking for a place in the sun with a bit of attitude. Whether it's clubbing in a brilliant turquoise Art Deco building in South Beach or doffing your duds at one of the few legal nude beaches in the U.S., this is a town with something for everyone.

Sleeping

The Soho Beach House, a few blocks north of South Beach, is cooler than the other side of the pillow on a winter camping trip in Yellowknife. There's a rooftop bar with perfectly weathered chairs, a sleek restaurant under the trees, a glam pool with striped blue and white cushions and it's right on Miami Beach. The lobby screams urban cool, and they also get cheeky with Cowshed toiletries that have names like Horny Cow and Knackered Cow. Uptown in Sunny Isles, not far from the shops of Aventura Mall, is Sole on the Ocean, which has a Miami Vice meets Brazil and Russia vibe, thanks to the shoppers who flock here. The bar is modern and glassy and they have a cozy pool and nice cabanas. Rooms go from around $325 a night at the Soho Beach House in October, while you can grab Sole for $216 a night and up.

Dining

Just steps from trendy Lincoln Road on Lenox Avenue, Yardbird is a gem for southern food. There's a nice patio, and inside you'll find a warm decor with an open kitchen and chalkboard signs that extol the virtues of bacon. The fried chicken is moist and tender and served on superbly fluffy biscuits with honey and sweet pepper jelly. The kale salad comes with shaved cheddar, apples, onion and "moonshine soaked" raisins. Back up in Sunny Isles, Timo has a wood oven for pizza and does a flavourful fennel and arugula salad with oranges, figs and a pistachio vinaigrette. The pastry chef makes an incredible genoise cheese flan topped with vanilla ice cream and toasted coconut in a pool of salted caramel with a chocolate drizzle. The News Café in South Beach (open 24 hours) is a great spot for lunch or breakfast and has two-for-one happy hours Monday to Friday from 4 to 7 p.m.

Drinking

The Clevelander Hotel is a 1938 Art Deco beauty that spouts loud music more or less all day, with dancing girls gyrating inches from the sidewalk. It's said to be the highest-grossing bar in Florida. At Soho Beach House opt for the Picante de la Casa, with tequila, lime, cilantro and agave, topped with a red chile pepper for a smoky kick. Yardbird has bourbons you might never see in Canada.

Doing

Take a tour from the Art Deco visitors centre at 10th and Ocean to check out sleek designs and to learn steamy details about the private lives of Hollywood stars.

The end of the world as we know it

Patagonia. There are few places as rugged and remote as the southern tip of South America

MELITA KUBURAS
melita.kuburas@metronews.ca

Patagonia's views remain unspoiled and picture perfect. PHOTOS: MELITA KUBURAS

Like most trips to Chilean Patagonia, this one begins in the port city of Punta Arenas. On this night in early September, the sun has set above this charming town located on the Strait of Magellan, and Venus is adding a twinkle at the bottom of the crescent moon. It's fitting that, when standing at the bottom of the earth, even the most familiar icon in the sky looks different.

Because it's so well connected by air and sea, Punta Arenas is a convenient jumping off point for travellers to Patagonia or Antarctica. Immigrants helped build this city. Their humble roots are even embedded in the architecture — the siding on houses shows pieced-together sheets, which once were metal boxes used to transport tea along the region's famed waterways. Roofs are painted in bright colours, another tradition that began with the use of scraps discarded by ships.

La Marmita restaurant offers the perfect introduction to traditional, locally sourced fare. Housed in a green building with a storefront sign that's reminiscent of Chilean muralists who defied former dictator Augusto Pinochet, La Marmita chefs present seafood specialties like shellfish, eel and crab.

Guanaco tenderloin is on the menu as a main course — a protected animal in Chile, but hunting of it is allowed in certain seasons to prevent overpopulation. Calafate berries are used in dipping sauces, desserts and even as a bloody-red twist on the Chilean national cocktail, pisco sour.

Between two oceans

The scenery along our Australis cruise is so raw and seemingly untouched — is this what Ferdinand Magellan saw when he first sailed this route to the Pacific? The snow-topped Andes dwarf the ship — a luxury liner that impressively navigates through fjords and narrow passages of the Canal de las Montanas. But unlike the Portuguese explorer's Victoria — a replica of which is shored in Punta Arenas, where we embarked — this ship is a pleasure to seek shelter in.

Wind-worn and well-fed, at night we hit the bar on the top deck, dancing salsa and merengue in our hiking boots. On the first night we sail through a snowstorm; on the second we anchor down for a rest in complete darkness, resting between two oceans.

Part of the Australis itinerary is to make stops along the little islands that shatter away from the mainland. We don our warmest clothes — snow pants and down coat for this Canadian — and pile into zodiacs that take us to the hulking Glacier Bernal.

Cinched between mountains and stretching above the turquoise lake bed, the bright blue spots of the glacier reveal themselves in honeycomb-like cracks. After the hike, the cruise staff serve whiskey and hot chocolate to warm us up before the boat ride back.

Windstar ships are motorized sailing yachts so they can operate under engine power when their masts are down. DIANE TIERNEY/FOR METRO

Hidden jewels of the Caribbean

Small-ship cruises. Access lesser-known ports for an authentic, less commercialized experience

DIANE TIERNEY
For Metro

Cruising the Caribbean is a great way to escape winter's wrath, and a cruise on a small ship that can access the lesser-known ports provides an authentic, less commercialized experience.

Windstar is a leader in small-ship cruising. It has three motorized sailing yachts called the Spirit, Star and Surf that carry 150 to 300 passengers. The line recently spent $18 million renovating the ships to nautical luxury.

Depending on which ship and voyage you choose, you can visit uncommon Caribbean ports such as: Basseterre on St. Kitts; Les Saintes in the French West Indies; Gustavia on St. Barts; Bequia of the Grenadines; Roseau, Dominica; St. Georges, Grenada; and Pigeon Island off St. Lucia.

You and your fellow passengers will be the only tourists in town in some of these ports.

You can be as active or as lazy as you like. Windstar offers many shore excursions at each port such as ATV tours, zip-lining, scuba diving, snorkelling, sailing a catamaran, jeep trekking, horseback riding, kayaking, and more.

Sometimes a shore excursion is the best way to see one of these lesser known ports than exploring on your own. For example, St. Barts is an expensive island — a taxi to and from the nearest beach is $40. That's partly because St. Barts is difficult to get to and, therefore, a haunt of the rich and famous such as Leonardo DiCaprio and Mariah Carey.

The town doesn't have typical souvenir shops, but rather boutiques such as Hermes, Armani, Ralph Lauren, Cartier and Prada. Affluence is everywhere, best represented by the sleek yachts in the harbour.

Windstar's WindSurf ship carries about 300 passengers and has a low-key atmosphere, ideal for relaxing. DIANE TIERNEY/FOR METRO

In Basseterre on St. Kitts, Canadian passenger Shelley Grist decided to take an ATV tour. "There isn't much of a town, so we took a three-hour trek through the jungle," she said. "We saw monkeys, spectacular views of the valleys and coast, and visited a plantation. You travel along dirt and grass paths. It was dirty, dusty and really fun."

Les Saintes is a tiny town of about three blocks, but the beautiful beaches offer shady palm trees, powdery sand and great snorkelling without the crowds.

"You immediately realize this is a quiet place to just enjoy the beach and snorkel or sail a catamaran," Grist said. "When you're visiting such offbeat places, you have to plan your days and shore excursions — one day at a beach on an obscure island and a special activity at another port — if you want some adventure."

On board, the high crew-to-passenger ratio of a small ship means service is much more personalized.

"The crew gets to know your name and anticipates your needs," Grist said. "You also get to know everyone on board quickly. Sharing your experiences is the entertainment."

As the ship sails away from port at sunset each day, the masts are raised to the powerful song Conquest of Paradise by Vangelis. The dramatic effect reminds everyone that this is a unique way to see uncommon Caribbean jewels.

A few simple substitutions take hummus from Middle East to Italy

This recipe serves four. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What would happen if hummus had been invented in Italy, rather than the Middle East?

Answer the question with this simple reimagining of the classic chickpea purée.

It's not as discordant as you might think. Many of the same flavour profiles can be found across both Italian and Middle Eastern cuisines.

Which makes sense, given relative geographic proximity. Even the ingredients and technique have common ground.

Italians make generous use of chickpeas and lemons — both essential to classic hummus. Though in the case of chickpeas, Italians tend to use them more often in soups and pastas than in spreads.

And when they do make spreads, they often reach for other beans, such as favas. While traditional hummus relies on tahini (ground sesame seeds) to add richness, Italians probably would be more inclined to reach for pine nuts.

So with those substitutions in mind, this delicious Italian-style hummus is topped with diced tomatoes spiked with balsamic vinegar.

1. In a food processor, combine the beans, half of the garlic, pine nuts, lemon zest and juice, and 1 tablespoon of the rosemary. Process until chunky smooth.

2. With the processor running, drizzle in the olive oil until the hummus reaches a smooth, silky texture. Taste, then season with salt and pepper, and set aside.

3. In a bowl, toss together the tomatoes, the remaining 1 teaspoon of rosemary and the remaining garlic. Taste, then season with salt and pepper.

4. Spoon the hummus into a wide, shallow bowl, using the back of the spoon to form a cavity at the centre.

5. Spoon tomatoes into the cavity in the hummus. Drizzle olive oil over the tomatoes and hummus, then sprinkle with a few drops of balsamic vinegar. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 15-oz can cannellini or other white beans, drained and rinsed
- 6 cloves garlic, minced, divided
- 1/2 cup pine nuts
- Zest and juice of 1 lemon
- 1 tbsp plus 1 tsp chopped fresh rosemary
- 1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil, plus extra
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 1 large tomato, diced
- Balsamic vinegar

Drink of the Week

Citrus Bubbly

Serve your appetizers with this refreshing drink that sparkles thanks to sparkling wine and has a citrusy flavour due to a combination of lime and lemon.

- 1 tsp lime juice
- 1 tsp lemon juice
- 1/2 oz Cointreau or other orange liqueur
- Sparkling wine, chilled
- Lemon twist, to garnish

In a Champagne flute, gently stir together the lime juice, lemon juice and orange liqueur. Top with sparkling wine, then garnish with a lemon twist.

Fall for an autumn mix

1. Heat the oven to 400 F.

2. Dry the chickpeas thoroughly by spreading them on a large plate and patting them dry with kitchen towels. Transfer to a bowl, then toss with 1 tablespoon of the oil, 1 teaspoon of the spice blend, if using, and salt and pepper to taste. Once the chickpeas are evenly coated, transfer them to a baking sheet and spread them in a single layer. Bake on oven's middle rack until golden and crispy, 25 to 35 minutes, shaking the tray to toss after the first 15 minutes. Remove the baking sheet from the oven and transfer the chickpeas to a serving bowl. Reduce the oven to 300 F.

3. Arrange the pumpkin seeds in a single layer on the sheet pan. Bake on the oven's middle rack for 10 minutes.

4. After the pumpkin seeds have baked, in a large skillet over medium, heat the remaining tablespoon of oil. Reduce the heat to medium-low, add the pumpkins seeds and cook, stirring, for 7 to 10 minutes. Add the remaining teaspoon of spice blend, if using, and salt and pepper to taste. Continue to cook, stirring, until the pumpkin seeds are golden and crispy, another 3 to 5 minutes.

5. Transfer the seeds to the serving bowl. Add the cranberries and pistachios and toss well.

Can that something up your sleeve impede your ability to succeed?

A bold personal brand. Students and grads speak up on tattoos in the workplace

MEGHAN GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

The influx of millennials into the workforce and the potential for age gaps between co-workers can result in mixed opinions on what is considered appropriate office wear.

Gen Y is often viewed as having a more casual approach to office appearance. That's not to say all millennials want to wear their sweatpants to work. It just means that younger hires are perceived to have open minds when it comes to what is acceptable in the office.

Kim Holt recently graduated from McMaster University and entered the workforce with tattoos.

Here's what Holt had to say about how tattoos can work both ways for your career.

Did you think about the effect your tattoos might have on your career?

I 100 per cent thought about how my tattoos might affect my career before I got them. However, aside from my tattoos, I have always been a creative and eccentric person. I knew from a very young age that when I grew up I was going to be in a field that thrived on creativity and originality.

Has having tattoos ever hindered your career or education?

Yes and no — having tattoos has yet to hinder my education. Many universities these days pride themselves on their acceptance of diversity. My tattoos have yet to impact my career.

Have you had to adjust your clothing at times to avoid a potential employer seeing them or felt stereotyped by an employer for having tattoos?

Where I currently work, I have never been made to feel like I cannot show my tattoos. However, when I first interviewed for the job I did dress appropriately and professionally. I think that no matter what kind of job you are interviewing for (whether you are allowed to show your tattoos or not), dressing formal is simply a sign of respect. It shows the potential employer that this is something you thought about, you have come prepared, and you took yourself out of your everyday life and into the world of employment. I have interviewed for many casual and formal attire jobs and I never let the day-to-day attire influence my interview wear.

Does this worker's indelible accessory make you question his professionalism? ISTOCK

If you could give one piece of advice to job seekers who are considering getting tattoos, what would it be?

Tattoos are a small part of a big picture. We can't predict the future but if an individual thinks that a tattoo is going to make them happy, then do it. Who is to say what we will regret in the future and what we won't? The only person who can control your happiness is yourself, and every person has their own way of fulfilling their happiness and self-expression and for me one of those ways just happens to be tattoos.

So what do you ink?

What did other millennials have to say about tattoos in the workplace?

- "The coffee shop I used to work at has a zero policy on tattoos. You have to cover tattoos with long sleeves, a sweater or even a Band-Aid if it's on your wrist or similar to that." - J. Charbonneau
- "I work in long-term care and many personal support workers have tattoos which are fully visible and I have not heard or seen anything negative. Many of our residents have tattoos also." - A. Lewis
- "I have worked in two restaurant chains in the past and neither have ever said anything or required cover-up regarding mine and my coworkers' tattoos. Customers on the other hand, sometimes do not hide their disapproval, which I find quite hilarious." - A. Dungan
- "From a non-tattooed perspective, it drives me insane when tattoos are visible in the workplace. I just find it so distracting and unprofessional. That being said, this is more of a clothing choice issue, not the actual tattoo itself." - N. Magistrale

Baby I get your money don't you worry: Lend those lost in their loonies a hand

Have you got a brain for bucks? For a career that actually makes cents, consider becoming a financial consultant

SHAHEERAH KAYANI

Money matters in some way to everyone, but not every individual excels at adding order to their assets. Why not help them through their cash crisis? ISTOCK

The finance industry is booming and in 2011 the Canadian banking system was named the soundest in the world. An expansion in industrial development means that there is a steady demand for financial services.

In fact, more than $300 billion worth of private sector industrial projects have been announced in Canada for the current decade. These projects will without question require financial services and you could be a part of the company or group that takes this on.

What is a financial consultant?

In an eggshell, a financial consultant gives management advice to people when it comes to matters of money.

A financial consultant will be hired for guidance if a client needs help reaching long-term financial goals, debt management guidance or advice for investments.

Financial consultants can also be employed by businesses to make sure that business plans make financial sense or to deal with financial challenges or budgeting.

Companies might also hire a financial consultant to answer questions about employee benefits and retirement plans.

What are the best parts of the job?

A big advantage of becoming a financial consultant is having the opportunity to run your own business while being supported by a highly recognized and prestigious company.

You have the freedom to choose to specialize in insurance, mortgages, taxation, investments and more. You're also able to explore your entrepreneurial spirit and down the line there is the potential to receive great pay.

It's good to know that at most financial consulting firms, the job pays solely commission in the first few years.

However, later on you can also receive a "trailer," which grows every year along with your client base.

TALENTEGG.CA IS CANADA'S LEADING JOB SITE AND ONLINE CAREER RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY STUDENTS AND RECENT GRADUATES.

What does it take?

If you're interested in becoming a financial consultant, ask yourself the following:

- Are you a people person?
- Are you outgoing and friendly?
- Do you have a large or well-connected professional and social network?
- Do you have entrepreneurial traits?
- Are you a hard worker?
- Do you have any solid prior customer service, retail or sales experience?

Jets held scoreless at home by Habs' Price

NHL. Winnipeg fails to catch up after a slow start as Montreal extends win streak

Carey Price made 35 saves as the Montreal Canadiens extended their winning streak to three games with a 3-0 victory over the Winnipeg Jets on Tuesday.

It was Price's first shutout of the season and 20th of his career. Ondrej Pavelec faced 25 shots for the Jets (3-4-0).

Brandon Prust, P.K. Subban and Daniel Briere, with an empty-netter on the power play, scored for Montreal (4-2-0), which ended a four-game road trip and returns home for five straight.

It was the third of a six-game homestand for the Jets, the longest of their season. They host St. Louis on Friday.

On Tuesday

Canadiens	Jets

With a number of fans wearing Habs jerseys in the stands at MTS Centre, the visitors quickly opened the scoring.

A Briere shot off the boards led to Prust's goal, as the puck bounced to him at the corner of the net and he poked it in behind Pavelec to make it 1-0 at 2:06.

It took the Jets just under seven minutes to get their first shot on goal, a span that included their own power play, as the Habs kept most of the action in Winnipeg's end.

Winnipeg killed off a penalty, but about a minute later Subban blasted a one-timer past Pavelec at 11:28, his eighth point in six games. The shots on goal at that point were 7-1 for Montreal.

The Jets finally turned it on during another power play, boosting their shots on goal to close Montreal's advantage to 10-8 at the end of the first period.

Canadiens forward Max Pacioretty fell to the ice during the first period. He didn't put any weight on his left leg as he was helped off the ice and didn't return.

The Jets kept pace with the Habs in the scoreless second period and took the lead in shots on goal 21-19.

Kane's game soaring to begin season

The season is young and the results so far mixed, but one Winnipeg Jet who came out of the gate ready to run this year is Evander Kane.

It's been noticed.

Kane has stepped up with a more physical all-round game and is now back with Bryan Little and Blake Wheeler on the team's No. 1 line.

"You look at the obvious things, like produce offensively, that's my job and that's what I'm counted on to do," says Kane, who has three goals and two assists in six games for the Jets.

"But I try to be a two-way player in terms of little things like blocking shots, taking hits, looking good in my own zone and creating offensive opportunities for myself and my linemates. Whatever I can do to help the team."

Going into Tuesday night's game Kane was a plus-3 so far this season, with a team-leading 30 shots on goal before Tuesday night's home game against Montreal.

That he shoots a lot isn't news, but he has been visibly more physical and defensively minded and says he wants to embrace a leadership role.

Quoted

"I haven't made the playoffs in my career and that's frustrating." Evander Kane

"I think Evander can bring the level of leadership up with his game," says coach Claude Noel.

"But all players are like that. There's other players as well that would like to take a more leadership role but it starts with your game. If you bring consistency to your A-game then you can now have a voice in the room. You can have a voice just by the way you play."

Heading into Tuesday Kane's average time on ice per game was just .02 seconds less than Bryan Little, who led all Winnipeg forwards at 20:09.

Penguins stay perfect at home

Evgeni Malkin's power-play goal 7:20 into the third period put the Pittsburgh Penguins in front for good and the Penguins stayed hot at home with a 3-2 win over the Edmonton Oilers on Tuesday night.

Pascal Dupuis and Chris Kunitz also scored for Pittsburgh. Sidney Crosby assisted on all three Penguin goals to vault him into the NHL scoring lead. Marc-Andre Fleury stopped 20 shots for Pittsburgh to improve to 5-0 on the season. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minnesota-Toronto

Reimer looks sharp in Leafs win

Outshot badly Tuesday night by the Minnesota Wild, the Toronto Maple Leafs managed to generate some opportunistic offence in a 4-1 victory at Air Canada Centre, their third straight.

Winning without the substantive play to back it up has become a familiar script for Toronto, which scored four goals on 14 shots. Goaltender James Reimer, who made a handful of vital stops to bail out teammates, frustrated Minnesota by making 36 saves on 37 shots.

Kesler pots a pair in Canucks win

Ryan Kesler scored the second of his two goals with 2:25 left in the third period to lead the Vancouver Canucks to a 3-2 win over the Philadelphia Flyers on Tuesday night.

Chris Higgins also scored for Vancouver and Roberto Luongo made the win stand with 20 saves.

Tye McGinn scored both goals for the Flyers, who dropped to 1-6. The Flyers haven't scored more than two goals in a game this season.

Red Sox hurlers lights-out against Tigers sluggers

MLB playoffs. Lackey outduels Verlander as Napoli's homer accounts for only run

Game 3

Red Sox	Tigers

Once again this October, one run was enough.

John Lackey edged Justin Verlander in the latest duel of these pitching-rich playoffs, and Boston's bullpen shut down Detroit's big boppers with the game on the line to lift the Red Sox over the Tigers 1-0 Tuesday for a 2-1 lead in the AL championship series.

Mike Napoli homered off Verlander in the seventh inning, and Detroit's best chance to rally fell short in the eighth when Miguel Cabrera and Prince Fielder struck out with runners at the corners.

"The runs are pretty stingy," Tigers manager Jim Leyland said. "This is what it's about in post-season, is good pitching."

Despite three straight gems by their starters, the Tigers suddenly trail in a best-of-seven series they seemed to control just two days ago. Game 4 is Wednesday night in Detroit, with Jake Peavy scheduled to start for the Red Sox against Doug Fister.

Lackey allowed four hits in 6 2/3 innings, striking out eight without a walk in a game that was delayed 17 minutes in the second inning because lights on the stadium towers went out.

"I think that little time off gave him a chance to slow down a little bit. He was excited and pumped that first inning," Boston catcher Jarrod Saltalamacchia said. "Kind of getting excited with his slider, throwing a little too hard and leaving it over the middle, but he was still pretty effective."

It was the second 1-0 game in this matchup between the highest-scoring teams in the majors. That's been the theme throughout these playoffs, which have included four 1-0 scores and seven shutouts in the first 26 games.

The 2014 Ford Tremor

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Review. Sandwiched between the long-gone SVT Lightning and the off-road SVT Raptor, the new Tremor may be the best of both worlds

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

Move over SVT Raptor because the Ford Tremor sport truck wants a piece of the action.

But instead of muscling its way into the specialty truck category, the more modestly powered and sized pickup aims to win friends with on-road street smarts — and not just off-road ability — as well as livable fuel efficiency.

Pickup trucks are as much about style and image as passenger cars. In fact the convergence of the two automotive genres over the past few decades has been quite remarkable. Originally little more than a bench seat and a box, the once humble pickup can now be found clothed in fancy sheetmetal, gussied up in the finest of interior trim and accessories and revved up with enough horsepower to plant you in your seat.

Ford's F-150-based Raptor that's now entering its fourth year of production has been a surprise hit at a time when all other pickup makers — Ford included — have been trying their best to reduce their truck's appetite for fuel. But whereas the Raptor's image is as a dune-bashing desert rat, the Tremor takes a different approach. It's very much a street truck, just like the 2000-2004 SVT Lightning, packaged up with equipment and accessories that collectively give it a unique flavour.

It's also only available as a short-wheelbase, regular-cab model fitted with the shortest available box. The result is not as useful as an extended-cab F-150 or a four-door crew cab, but it makes the Tremor lighter on its feet and in a way that actually seems more purpose-built, just like the short-box, regular-cab Lightning of old.

To give the Tremor its solid-citizen demeanor, Ford opted not to take the V8 route (the Lightning had a supercharged 5.4-litre unit) and instead installed a twin-turbocharged 3.5-litre V6 that produces 365 horsepower and 420 pound-feet of torque at 2,500 r.p.m.

Those aren't exactly weak-kneed stats — they're about the same as the Lightning, actually — and they clearly indicate that the "EcoBoost" V6 will give a good accounting of itself from a standing start, especially with the 4.10:1 rear-axle gear. The powertrain can be optioned with an electronic locking rear differential that reduces wheel slippage, especially when accelerating from a dead stop.

The Tremor also dominates the much larger and heavier SVT Raptor's 16.5/11.0 fuel economy.

Also looking good is the Tremor's interior, where Ford has tossed out the regular cab's standard cloth-covered bench seat and installed twin buckets covered in tasteful leather with faux suede inserts and contrasting piping. In addition, there's an industrial-looking floor shifter integrated with a generously sized console.

Included as standard is MyFordTouch communications and infotainment system (run by a touchscreen).

With a guesstimated starting price in the mid-$40,000 range, including destination charges (about $15,000 shy of the SVT Raptor), the well-equipped Tremor is a pretty appealing vehicle that just might catch on with pickup buyers looking for some show and go, as opposed to owning a straight-up work truck.

2014 Ford Tremor

- Type. Four-door, rear- /four-wheel-drive full-size pickup
- Engines (hp). 3.5-litre DOHC V6, turbocharged (365)
- Transmissions. Six-speed automatic
- Base price (incl. destination) $45,000

Fuel Economy

The rear-wheel-drive Tremor should deliver in the neighbourhood of 13 l/100 km city and 9.3 l/100 km highway. Those unofficial estimates will suffer a bit with optional four-wheel-drive and will likely take a real beating in the hands of buyers who actually drive the Tremor the way it's intended.

Design

The Tremor's distinguishing exterior features begin with an appearance package that includes a blacked-out grille insert, darkened headlight and taillight covers, chromed exhaust tip and black 20-inch wheels with Pirelli Scorpion tires.

The simple yet sleek interior is accompanied by the MyFordTouch system.

The minivan's evolution in America

Autoknow. If a Swiss Army knife could have four tires, fake wood trim and be related to the K-car ...

TODD D. BURLAGE
wheelbasemedia.com

The simple K-car platform spawned a variety of vehicles other than the minivan. The hideous fake wood stickers were just that: hideous and stickers.

It's not very often that the right vehicle comes along at the right time, but when it does, it can be magic — although not necessarily a thing of beauty. Obviously.

The minivan was not a new concept (as Volkswagen would likely argue), but in North America, Chrysler was able to popularize the idea as a then-modern interpretation/evolution of a glorious piece of solid-gold Americana, even if the result looked like a garden shed with a sliding side door.

Previous to this, the "woodie" wagon class of vehicles (models were available from numerous automakers over the years) became a symbol of freedom and adventure through the 1950s. With their stunning real-wood exterior trim pieces, they might have actually been a bit extravagant for the average family, but the bar had been set.

When craftsmanship and style lost out to the 1970s — and the 1980s — boxy station wagons sported fake wood and decals to carry on the theme of the traditional woodie wagon, however watered down. Even the Brady Bunch packed the whole gang of nine into Carol's 1971 Plymouth Satellite woodie and headed to the Grand Canyon.

But evolution was way overdue when it came to family friendly transportation, and Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca had the perfect answer: the minivan.

Taller than a station wagon, smaller than a cargo van, and way more comfortable than either, the minivan blended the smooth handling of front-wheel-drive with the fuel efficiency of a regular car.

User-friendly sliding doors, plenty of cargo space, easy drivability and kid-friendly seating became the hallmark traits of the minivan, and the reason we recognize this unique piece of Americana as it celebrates its 30th birthday. On Nov. 2, 1983, in Windsor, Ont., production began on the first model of Iacocca's brainchild, and a new generation of family transportation was born, right alongside the soccer mom.

If you were alive in the 1980s and you weren't at some point ferried around in one of these little league taxis, you never lived. Well, that might be going a little too far. The minivan has been the butt of many jokes over the last three decades. You have seen the stickers in the back window, right? Well, "thank you for informing me that you have a stick-figure family of six plus dog and a cat and whatever that thing is at the end. Good thing, because your minivan had me under the impression that you were wild and single."

That's just one.

Minivan vision, giantlike idea

The minivan concept was not necessarily a new idea. In fact, while Iacocca was working as an executive at Ford Motor Company, he pitched the idea of a smaller, front-wheel-drive van to Henry Ford II, but was shot down in flames. Iacocca moved on and got the last laugh when Chrysler essentially launched an entirely new vehicle segment in 1983 with production of the Dodge Caravan and Plymouth Voyager, both of which became staples in family driveways all across North America. By simply producing a compact box that drove like a car — a K-car as a matter of fact — and kept the kids out of each other's airspace, Chrysler hit it big. And by 1988, more than 450,000 minivans were being sold each year. Finally, the family could roll comfortably through McDonald's drive-thru to pick up a new delicacy called the McNugget, while listing to Billie Jean from Michael Jackson on the radio, on the way to National Lampoon's Vacation at the theatre, to watch the Griswolds make their way to Walley World amusement park in their Ford Country Squire woodie wagon, affectionately known as the Wagon Queen Family Truckster. Rival automakers took notice of the growing popularity and convenience of the minivan, but their reaction time was that of petrified stone and the Chrysler minivan fleet was too entrenched for others to make any kind of quick dent in Iacocca's juggernaut idea. General Motors eventually tapped the market with its Chevy Astro and GMC Safari. Ford countered with Aerostar, but Chrysler still controlled this segment through the 1980s and most of the 1990s until the Honda Odyssey and Toyota Sienna claimed a decent slice of the pie. But even today, Chrysler still owns the minivan market. The Dodge Caravan remained the world's best-selling minivan in 2012 and Chrysler has sold more than 13 million over the course of three decades, or about half of all minivans purchased in North America.

What does this minivan have in common with the first one? In principle, everything. Technically, though? Nothing. The first one had only a passenger-side sliding door; you're supposed to let the kiddies out onto the sidewalk and not into moving traffic. ALL IMAGES WHEELBASE

30 Years And Counting

To celebrate the longevity and success of its Town & Country and Grand Caravan minivans, Chrysler is releasing a special 30th anniversary edition of both models in November. And they are far from momma's minivan, decked out with aluminum wheels, third-row power folding seats, leather-wrapped heated steering wheel and a twin-screen Blu-Ray movie player. "As the minivan segment and innovation leaders," said Ben Winter, Chrysler's vice-president of vehicle engineering, "it's important that we continue to offer tremendous content and value, setting us apart from the rest of the segment." And showing no real reason or sign of slowing down, Chrysler has committed resource and revenue to a full redesign of the Town and Country in 2015. Chrysler's 700C Concept at the 2012 International auto show in Detroit, Mich., offered a glimpse of a lighter and more aerodynamic design to boost fuel economy. Whatever the minivan redesign looks like, be sure that soccer moms, little-league dads and road-trippers from all over suburbia will be loading them up and heading out to the Grand Canyon, Walley World or wherever.

Chrysler's goal

"It's important that we continue to offer tremendous content and value, setting us apart from the rest of the segment."

Ben Winter, Chrysler VP of vehicle engineering

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Nothing is beyond your capabilities today but you must be clear what you desire. If not, you may scatter your energy while failing to reach the one destination that matters.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Someone who usually gives you a hard time will be as nice as pie today and you will be a bit suspicious. They do want to improve your relationship. Meet them halfway.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
People are different and clashes of opinion are inevitable. It is how you choose to deal with them that counts. Don't try to shout others down. Discuss your differences rationally.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Listen to and act upon your instincts. If you proceed on the assumption that your inner voice knows best, you won't go wrong. If you listen to "experts", you may go everywhere but where you should.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
The more others tell you that something cannot be done, the more you will strive to prove them wrong. You won't even have to strive too hard as everything comes easy to you now.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
The cure for the blues is action, so throw yourself into something that requires effort and concentration today and you will soon forget your worries — and you'll be in a more positive mood to deal with Friday's eclipse.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Venus, your ruler, linked to Uranus, planet of the unexpected, will bring nice surprises today but don't take anything for granted. Find ways to show you appreciate it.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Your enemies may be tough but you are tougher and no matter how hard they try to outsmart you over the next 24 hours, they won't succeed. Be gracious and forgiving in victory. It'll annoy them more.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Someone new will come into your life over the next 24 hours, someone who makes a big impression. Will you fall head over heels in love? Maybe. But even if you don't, it's a friendship made in heaven.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Today's Venus-Uranus link will perk you up and help you see that even when things seem to be going wrong you are still moving in the right direction. Don't worry about tomorrow.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Push your luck as far as it will go today. You may be surprised how easily others give in to your demands. For best results though, make sure they gain too. There's more than enough good stuff to go around.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Go all out to impress those in positions of power. The more you act as if nothing is too much, the more inclined others will be to shower you with praise. SALLY BROMPTON
